A FOOT UPON THE STEP.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

A foot upon the step-And a hand upon the door,

But I needed courage yet To adventure more! The clouds were rolling fleet, And the wind was blowing south; 'Twas the very hour to meet-My heart was in my mouth!

What power, sweet Love, is thine, That thus the heart can take?-That, like a trembling reed, Can make a strong man shake?

I pushed the door ajar-And gently called her name; And, like an angel star. Her gentle presence came!

She blamed me-yet her blame A smile did often show; She said she must be gone-Yet she moved not a step to go

She said she loved me well, And-after years had flown We might have-who could tell? A cottage of our own!

So I must toil away

My honest heart to prove; But labor seemeth play When we work for those we love! And sometimes I may smile When I think of days of yore; When my heart was in my mouth

This they were successful in finding—a route nor country avoiding those damages; but at the same time they believe much more destrationed and eligible for the road, and more to the advantage and benefit of the Company. That route is the one now graded down the hir, leaving the road near Nealan's tovern, and passing down Whiskey run, to a point on the river very near the Bridge over the Ohio; from thence the road is located up the river.

The Directors, finding it impossible tain the plank for the road this fall, did not think it expedient to urge forward the grading on the entire route, at they believe by procuring the plank this winter, the road to Harrisville will be complete coming summer. It should be reco that much of our road is located on the old. State road, which we believed could not be worked without much disadvantage to the Company and community, until the plank were ready to lay. We have had the work steadily progressing, without any intermis-sion, since its commencement. A number of contracts are now let, between Nealan's and Harrisville-some of which are being worked, and others to be worked through the winter. We intend and expect to have all those parts of the road that are off the old road, under contract and graded in the course of the winter. The work has been done as fast as it could be to advantage. The difficulties of location have all been surmounted —the right of way secured, and the most difficult and expensive part of the grading done. The rands of the Company are in good condition, as but forty per cent. of the stock subscribed has been called for-and this has been paid with a promptness that shows the Company is composed of stockhol-ders who are able and determined to have the work finished. The prompt payment of enstalments has enabled the Board to fulfill all their engagements readily.

They are now satisfied, from their experience and knowledge of the work, that $30, 000, or less, will complete the whole road. Near $20,000 of this is now taken, and there are constant and steady additions to the is very desirable those really interested in the roud should exert themselves to obtain.
